For elementary and middle schools, multiple linear regression has been used to predict each school's 2010-11 percent proficient based on the school's data from 2008-09, 2009-10, and 2010-11. A prediction has been made for each content area and grade level that was tested in previous years. The prediction is compared to the school's actual 2009-10 percent proficient. This method will allow the determination of an Achievement Change component, even across assessments that are not comparable. The school's achievement score in that content area is adjusted based on whether the school exceeds or does not meet the prediction.
